Introduction

Under the Communications Act 2003 ("the Act"), Ofcom has a duty to set standards for broadcast content to secure the standards objectives<sup>1</sup>. Ofcom also has a duty to ensure that On Demand Programme Services ("ODPS") comply with certain standards requirements set out in the Act<sup>2</sup>.

Ofcom reflects these requirements in its codes and rules. The Broadcast and On Demand Bulletin reports on the outcome of Ofcom's investigations into alleged breaches of its codes and rules, as well as conditions with which broadcasters licensed by Ofcom are required to comply. The codes and rules include:

- a) Ofcom's Broadcasting Code ("the Code") for content broadcast on television and radio services licensed by Ofcom, and for content on the BBC's licence fee funded television, radio and on demand services.
- b) the Code on the Scheduling of Television Advertising ("COSTA"), containing rules on how much advertising and teleshopping may be scheduled on commercial television, how many breaks are allowed and when they may be taken.
- c) certain sections of the BCAP Code: the UK Code of Broadcast Advertising, for which Ofcom retains regulatory responsibility for television and radio services. These include:
  - the prohibition on 'political' advertising;
  - 'participation TV' advertising, e.g. long-form advertising predicated on premium rate telephone services – notably chat (including 'adult' chat), 'psychic' readings and dedicated quiz TV (Call TV quiz services); and
  - gambling, dating and 'message board' material where these are broadcast as advertising<sup>3</sup>.
- d) other conditions with which Ofcom licensed services must comply, such as requirements to pay fees and submit information required for Ofcom to carry out its statutory duties. Further information can be found on Ofcom's website for television and radio licences.
- e) Ofcom's Statutory Rules and Non-Binding Guidance for Providers of On-Demand Programme Services for editorial content on ODPS (apart from BBC ODPS). Ofcom considers sanctions for advertising content on ODPS referred to it by the Advertising Standards Authority ("ASA"), the co-regulator of ODPS for advertising, or may do so as a concurrent regulator.

Other codes and requirements may also apply to broadcasters, depending on their circumstances. These include the requirements in the BBC Agreement, the Code on Television Access Services (which sets out how much subtitling, signing and audio description

Broadcast Standards cases

In Breach

Scotland Yard

Talking Pictures TV, 13 September 2017, 15:25

Introduction

Talking Pictures TV is an entertainment channel broadcasting classic films and archive programmes. The channel is owned and operated by Talking Pictures TV Ltd ("Talking Pictures" or "the Licensee").

Scotland Yard is a series of short British crime dramas made between 1953 and 1961. The episode The Mail Van Murder was produced in 1957 and shows a Police Superintendent on the trail of a violent gang boss.

We received a complaint about potentially offensive language broadcast at 15:30. In a scene near the start of the programme, two men, one black and one white, were shown being released from prison. A car was shown pulling up outside the prison and a voice from within the car said to the black man, "Get in, sambo". He got into the car but when the white man tried to follow him he was told, "Sorry, no lift". The car drove away, leaving the white man standing outside the prison and the story continued, focusing on him.

We considered the language raised potential issues under Rule 2.3 of the Code, which states:

Rule 2.3: "In applying generally accepted standards broadcasters must ensure that material which may cause offence is justified by the context..."

We therefore sought comments from the Licensee on how the programme complied with this rule.

Response

Talking Pictures apologised, saying "We never want to offend our viewers", who it said are likely to be adult viewers aged over 55. It said that all its programmes are "reviewed before broadcast to check for content and terminology used in the era of production...that could raise concerns among today's audiences". However, the Licensee said that in this case its editor "was not familiar with the term 'sambo'". Further, it argued that because the word was used "in the context of an ex-prisoner being collected from prison on release while his co-prisoner was not offered a lift, it did not stand out as a discriminatory or insulting term". Therefore, "the error arose...due to our editor's ignorance of the term, as well as the manner in which it was delivered in the show i.e. it was not used aggressively or in an insulting manner".

However, Talking Pictures said "We do not defend the use of the term 'sambo' on the basis of the historical context. We acknowledge that the term is likely to be offensive to those who recognise it and its connotations today".

After being made aware of the complaint, the Licensee said it had “dipped the audio to remove the term on repeat broadcasts” and revised its editorial guidelines “to broaden the language references that will automatically trigger referral [to the channel’s managing director] for approval”.

The Licensee also made representations in response to Ofcom’s Preliminary View, which was that the programme was in breach of Rule 2.3 the Code. It questioned whether the word “sambo” should be treated “on a par with highly offensive, racist insults like the N and P words” as the word was recognised by less than 40% of respondents in Ofcom’s 2016 research on offensive language and “is recorded in the Collins dictionary as ‘in the lower 50% of commonly used words’”. It also questioned why Ofcom’s Preliminary View did not refer to “a generational divide on the understanding of certain words” noted in Ofcom’s 2016 research. The Licensee also provided several online sources<sup>1</sup> on the “meaning and understanding” of the word “sambo”. Further, Talking Pictures stressed that, in its view, the statement (“Get in, sambo”) “clearly had no racist intent, no insult and was understandable in the context of the era of the programme” and that “the word was not used in a highly offensive or discriminatory manner”.

The Licensee also said that: “The error in question here was generational not intentional [emphasis added by Licensee] or deliberate and we acted quickly to correct it”. Talking Pictures argued that “given the swift action we took to what was a genuine human error” Ofcom should consider the matter to be resolved as Ofcom “does in some cases of a F-word being stated pre-watershed or the N-word being said in a historical, Southern US film”. It also referred to the use of the word “Paki” included in episodes of the British sitcom “Only Fools and Horses”, stating that this offensive term was used “for a corner shop owner in 2007 and this was...resolved by Ofcom” in relation to an episode broadcast by UKTV Gold.

Decision

Reflecting our duties under the Communications Act 2003<sup>2</sup>, Section Two of the Code requires that “generally accepted standards” are applied so as to provide adequate protection for members of the public from the inclusion of harmful or offensive material.

Ofcom has taken account of the audience’s and the broadcaster’s right to freedom of expression set out in Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights. Ofcom must seek an appropriate balance between ensuring members of the public are adequately protected from material which may be considered offensive on one hand and the right to freedom of expression on the other.

Under Rule 2.3, broadcasters must ensure that potentially offensive material is justified by context. Context is assessed by reference to a range of factors including the editorial content of the programme, the service in which the material is broadcast, the time of broadcast and the likely expectation of the audience.

We first considered whether the language had the potential to cause offence. Ofcom's 2016 research<sup>3</sup> on offensive language makes clear that the word "sambo" is considered by audiences to be a derogatory term for black people and to be among the "strongest language" and "highly unacceptable without strong contextualisation". We took into account that, on the one hand, although the Licensee argued that the 2016 research had referred to there being "a generational divide on the understanding of certain offensive words", "sambo" was not listed as one of these words. On the other hand, although respondents considered "sambo" to be highly offensive at all times, recognition of the word was "low". However, the research also found that even if respondents were not familiar with a particular word and were therefore not personally offended, they were clear that care should be taken over the use of such words because of their potential to cause offence.

Ofcom then considered whether the broadcast of this word was justified by the context. We considered that viewers were unlikely to have expected to hear highly offensive discriminatory language without the strongest contextualisation.

Talking Pictures acknowledged that the word "sambo" was offensive, but added that the use of it in this case "clearly had no racist intent, no insult and was understandable in the context of the era of the programme". We acknowledged that the word "sambo" was not delivered aggressively although in the context of the programme it was not clear whether its use had a racist or insulting intent. However, we considered that many of the likely audience for the programme, who as the Licensee confirmed were those aged 55 and over, would have recognised the word and, as the Licensee accepted, may have found it offensive. Viewers would also have realised that this film was made in the 1950s and therefore reflected language used at the time. The word was used casually, but without being challenged or otherwise contextualised as a modern audience might expect it to be, particularly in a pre-watershed broadcast. There was also no warning given ahead of the broadcast.

We took into account that the word had been missed during pre-broadcast checks, the Licensee removed the word from repeat broadcasts, and has taken steps to ensure that the transmission of such offensive language does not occur again.

On 9 January 2017, Talking Pictures was found<sup>4</sup> in breach of the Code for the broadcast, on 24 August 2016, of racially offensive language before the watershed without sufficient contextual justification. In the present case, Talking Pictures argued that "given the swift action we took to what was a genuine human error" Ofcom should consider the matter to be resolved as Ofcom "does in some cases of a F-word being stated pre-watershed or the N-word being said in a historical, Southern US film" or in cases where the word "Paki" was broadcast in episodes of "Only Fools and Horses"<sup>5</sup>. However, we considered that these cases were not directly comparable, and that this was the second time in a relatively short time period that the Licensee had broadcast racially offensive and discriminatory language in pre-recorded programming. We considered the subsequent steps taken by Talking Pictures were not sufficient to mitigate the potential offence in this case. Therefore, it was Ofcom's Decision that the broadcast of this offensive language exceeded generally accepted standards, in breach of Rule 2.3 of the Code.

We note the steps taken by the Licensee to improve compliance. However, we do not expect any repetition of such content in future.

Breach of Rule 2.3

Broadcast Licence Conditions cases

In Breach

Broadcast licensees' late and non-payment of licence fees

Various licensees

Introduction

Ofcom is partly funded by the broadcast licence fees it charges television and radio licensees. Ofcom has a statutory obligation to ensure that the fees paid by licensees meet the cost of Ofcom's regulation of broadcasting. The approach Ofcom takes to determining licensees' fees is set out in the Statement of Charging Principles<sup>1</sup>. Detail on the fees and charges payable by licensees is set out in Ofcom's Tariff Tables<sup>2</sup>.

The payment of a licence fee and payment made on time is a requirement of a broadcasting licence.<sup>3</sup>

- 1) 'The Licensee shall pay to Ofcom such fees as Ofcom may determine in accordance with the tariff fixed by it and for the time being in force under Section 87 (3) of the 1990 Act as Ofcom shall from time to time publish in such manner as it considers appropriate.
- 2) Payment of the fees referred to...above shall be made in such manner and at such times as Ofcom shall specify...'

Failure by a licensee to pay its licence fee when required represents a significant and fundamental breach of a broadcast licence, as it means that Ofcom may be unable properly to carry out its regulatory duties.

In Breach – late payment

The following licensees failed to pay their annual licence fees by the required payment date. These licensees have therefore breached Condition 4(2) of their licences.

The outstanding payments have now been received by Ofcom. Ofcom will not be taking any further regulatory action in these cases.

Complaints outside of remit

Here are alphabetical lists of complaints received by Ofcom that fell outside of our remit. This is because Ofcom is not responsible for regulating the issue complained about. For example, the complaints were about the content of television, radio or on demand adverts or an on demand service does not fall within the scope of regulation.

BBC First

A new BBC Royal Charter and Agreement was published in December 2016, which made Ofcom the new independent regulator of the BBC.

Under the BBC Agreement, Ofcom can normally only consider complaints about BBC programmes where the complainant has already complained to the BBC and the BBC has reached its final decision (the 'BBC First' approach).

The complaints in this table had been made to Ofcom before completing the BBC's complaints process.
